Colloquium rationale

The world we live in is constantly undergoing technological revolutions, often discussing the introduction of new methods and the integration of innovative technologies—in other words, changing to become more modern and efficient. This can impact various different fields.

In this context, artificial intelligence is no exception to the rule. This revolutionary technology disrupts traditions and sparks a compelling debate among professionals in various scientific fields, including the field of Law, where the term "algorithmic justice" is often mentioned.

The use of AI in the legal domain raises questions regarding legal responsibility, data protection, ethics, and human rights protection. It can be employed to automate certain tasks such as legal research, contract analysis, and litigation prediction. However, it's essential to note that AI cannot completely replace lawyers, judges, notaries, etc., as it cannot take into account all the emotional and ethical aspects of a legal dispute.

In terms of legal responsibility, it's crucial to clarify who is accountable if errors or damages occur due to AI decisions. Data protection issues are also significant, as AI often requires access to large amounts of sensitive data. From an ethical standpoint, ensuring fair and unbiased AI usage, free from discrimination or prejudice, is important. It's also crucial to protect human rights and avoid violating fundamental rights when utilizing AI.
