This congress serves as a knowledge exchange platform in applied zoology. It explores the relationships between aquatic species, their habitats, and environmental pressures, highlighting innovative conservation and sustainable management methodologies. It emphasizes the role of zoology in preventing and controlling zoonotic diseases, enhancing human and animal health through comprehensive surveillance, diagnostics, and population management. It investigates the latest integrated pest management methods in agriculture, promoting eco-friendly approaches to minimize agricultural losses and ensure food security. It also examines the interactions between organisms and their environment, focusing on the responses of animal populations to climate change, habitat degradation, and other anthropogenic pressures, proposing solutions to mitigate these impacts. The congress fosters dialogue and collaboration among researchers, practitioners, and policymakers, aiming to advance the field of applied zoology. Your participation and contribution to this discussion are highly anticipated.
